Pam Kingsbury lives in Florence. She earned her B.S. degree from the University of North Alabama and her M.A. in creative writing and Contemporary American and World Literature from the University of New Mexico at Albuquerque. Ms. Kingsbury has been an adjunct instructor of English at UNA and UAH. She served as one of the American editors of Stand Magazine and worked as the movie critic and book reviewer for the Albuquerque Tribune/Journal.

This program is made possible by the Alabama Humanities Foundation (AHF), the state affiliate of the National Endowment for the Humanities. The AHF brings scholars and the public together to explore human values and meanings through the study of history, literature, religion, philosophy and other humanities disciplines.
